Sexism in schools ‘must be treated seriously like homophobia and racism’

 Michelle O'Toole

🕒 20th October 2015, 7.49 PM

A government-backed report calls for a clampdown on sexist language in the playground, after a similar push to challenge homophobia.

New government-backed guidelines released today say that sexist language such as “don’t be a girl” and “sissy” can be just as damaging to students as racist or homophobic comments.

The guidelines were drawn up by the Institute of Physics (IoP) as part of its “Opening Doors” research project which released its report today.

It says: “[Sexism] is just as unacceptable as racist and homophobic language.”

Noting examples from existing schools, it continued: “All the schools had policies to counter racist, homophobic and sexist language.

“However, in almost all cases, infringements in the last case were treated less seriously than the other two.

“Often, during a visit, the Senior Leadership Team (SLT) would assert that there was no problem with sexist language, only for the classroom teachers to refer to some cases and the students to report that it was an everyday reality.

“Such language was often dismissed as ‘harmless banter’, but many of the students, particularly girls, did not see it as such, and, in extreme cases, it verged on bullying.”
